Key PSLF Deadline is Oct. 31 - Check Your Status Today

Time is running out for nonprofit employees with federal student loan debt to take advantage of the time-limited expanded relief under the Public Service Loan Forgiveness \(PSLF\) program. If you work for a nonprofit and have federal student loans, you only have until October 31 to apply for this temporary expansion of the program. PSLF is a federal program that allows nonprofit workers to earn forgiveness of federal student loans after working fulltime and making 120 payments. The forgiveness process zeroes out the remaining balance of the loans and relieves workers of a substantial financial burden. Nonprofit workers can benefit from the Temporary PSLF Waiver available through the end of October to have payments that previously didn't count toward forgiveness included.

Proposed Regs: Employee or Independent Contractor?: Last week the U.S. Department of Labor (DOL) announced a new proposed rule for determining whether workers should be treated as employees or independent contractors under the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA). The distinction matters because under FLSA, employees, but not independent contractors, must be paid the minimum wage and overtime. The DOL is seeking to replace Trump-era regulations that made it easier for employers to classify workers as independent contractors. The proposed new rule would return to a more traditional six-factor “economic realities” test that would consider (1) the individual’s opportunity for profit or loss depending on managerial skill, (2) investments by the parties, (3) the degree of permanence of the work relationship, (4) the nature and degree of control by the employer, (5) the extent to which the work performed is an integral part of the employer’s business, and (6) the worker’s skill and initiative. The proposed rule is open for public comments through November 28. See tips for filing comments on proposed rules.

Short-Form Tax Exemption Application Deeply Flawed: The simplified form for securing tax-exempt status for smaller charitable nonprofits (IRS Form 1023-EZ) does not require enough material for the IRS to determine which organizations are and are not legally eligible, according to a new report from the Treasury Inspector

General for Tax Administration. The Inspector General's office conducted an undercover testing operation and secured §501(c)(3) status for four of five nonexistent organizations. The office also found that the IRS conducts follow-up reviews of fewer than one-percent of the Form 1023-EZ applicants that receive tax-exempt status. The National Council of Nonprofits, state charities officers, and the IRS Taxpayer Advocate have long criticized the short-form application as being inadequate, open to abuse, and harmful to the wellbeing of the charitable nonprofit sector. A recent New York Times investigation confirmed and further exposed the short form's serious shortcomings

Number of Donors Continues to Decline: The number of individuals giving to charitable nonprofits declined 7% in the first half of 2022 compared to the same period last year, according to the latest data from the Fundraising Effectiveness Project. According to the report, the decrease in donors came from a collapse donations of less than $500 and one-time donors.

Update on Higher Education Endowment Tax: The 2017 Tax Cuts and Jobs Act included a provision designed to make the wealthiest colleges and universities pay taxes on their endowment income, a tax estimated at the time to bring in $200 million per year. According to an analysis of IRS data by the Wall Street Journal, however, the endowment tax generated $68 million from 33 schools. Institutions of higher education are subject to the 1.4% levy on their net investment income if they have at least 500 tuition-paying students, more than half of whom are in the U.S., and their endowment equals at least $500,000 per student.

Nonprofit Workforce Shortages

Child Care Shortages and Nonprofits

Market failures and lack of public investment in child care have led to crisis-level understaffing at child care facilities across the country, causing multiple stresses on all charitable organizations. The well-documented nonprofit workforce shortage persists in a time of low unemployment and rising wages due to pandemic-related and pre-existing problems. Research by the National Council of Nonprofits found that salary competition with the for-profit and government sectors is leading workers to leave nonprofits jobs and a lack of child care options causes many potential employees to decline job offers from nonprofit employers.

The latest Federal Reserve data show that while total employment in the United States now exceeds pre-pandemic levels, some segments of the nation's workforce continue to struggle, most notably child care. Employment in facilities providing child day care services is still down by more than 100,000 jobs, representing 10% of pre-pandemic capacity. A critical factor is economics. One writer observed recently that the typical cost of sending a young child to day care exceeds the cost of in-state college tuition, yet child care workers rank among the worst-paid employees, earning less on average than animal caretakers and housekeepers.

- "Caregiving — whether for elderly patients, or young children — is extremely labor-intensive. The labor itself is emotionally and physically demanding. And care recipients often cannot absorb the full cost of these services on their own. ... No wonder, then, that amid widespread labor shortages, and workers' demands for higher wages, nursing homes and child-care facilities are having difficulty holding onto staff."

Communities Overcoming Poll Worker Shortages

Workforce shortages are also impacting the ability of localities to carry out elections, leading some communities to seek creative solutions to ensuring the polls can open this election season. “Rather than saying, ‘We want you,’ like they did for the military, we’re saying, ‘We need you,’” stressed a Cook County, Illinois clerk at a press conference recently. Allegheny County, Pennsylvania, had a sign-up table at the Pittsburgh Steelers’ home opener to recruit veterans as part of its partnership with Vet the Vote, a coalition reporting recruitment of more than 36,000 poll workers this year, so far. The county also set up a Student Poll Worker Program, noting that three-out-of-five poll workers are at least 61 years old, and there is a need to engage and involve students who want to participate in democracy even if they cannot vote yet. Similarly, Montgomery County, Maryland, has a Future Vote program that allows the County’s Board of Elections to recruit student volunteers between the sixth and twelfth grade as election aides; so far, 709 students have signed up for this year’s elections. Finally, the Poll Worker, Esq. program led by the American Bar Association asks lawyers to volunteer or serve as poll workers. In nine states, lawyers who train and work at the polls can obtain Continuing Legal Education credits.

States Consider Taxing Student Loan Forgiveness

Student loan forgiveness and debt cancellation are not considered taxable income under federal law; however, many states treat the debt relief differently. State lawmakers and regulators are now moving to clarify tax policies on whether borrowers must pay state income tax on any potential forgiveness or debt cancellation received. After the announcement of debt cancellation by the Biden Administration, governors and administrators in the District of Columbia, Hawai`i, Massachusetts, and Pennsylvania announced that their states will not impose state income taxes. A New York bill moving through the Legislature would exclude any student loan forgiveness from state income tax. Going the other way, four states (Indiana, Mississippi, Minnesota, and North Carolina) plan to maintain separation from the federal tax and treat student loan relief as taxable income. However, after the NC Department of Revenue clarified that student loan forgiveness is taxable for state income tax purposes, Governor Cooper called on legislators to waive the tax. Borrowers in Arkansas, California, and Wisconsin must wait for further clarifications by legislators or regulators.

New Tool for Measuring State Nonprofit Regulatory Frameworks

Nonprofit researchers have introduced a new measure of state-level charity regulation, the regulatory breadth index \(RBI\), to provide baseline data to “accurately and appropriately measure state-based regulatory breadth” within a state and compared across states. The RBI contains five specific sub-indices: registration law and exemptions from registering; fundraising regulations; requirements for notice, filing, or review of transactions; requirements for audits; and requirements for notice or action for dissolutions. The tool is designed to be used as predictive, mediating, or a control variable for the differences in regulatory regimes. It can also enable nonprofit advocates and policymakers to “benchmark” regulatory frameworks across states.

The Value of Nonprofits: What Candidates Are Saying

Elections give charitable nonprofits the opportunity to raise candidates' awareness about both the impact of their organizations and the needs in communities. An excellent tool for generating profound insights is the nonpartisan candidate questionnaire.

In recent months, several state associations of nonprofits, including the North Carolina Center for Nonprofits, Maine Association of Nonprofits, and the CT Community Nonprofit Alliance, invited candidates running for local, state, and federal offices to share their insights on issues of interest to nonprofits and communities at large. To remain nonpartisan, charitable nonprofits cannot rank the candidates or comment on their responses. Still, reading the candidates' responses often reveals how experience working for or with charitable organizations can give a candidate insight into the policies and legislation that improve their communities.
